

classmates.com
 I graduated in...
 Find your old high school
 City [v] State [v] Search

The Salt Lake Tribune

WEDNESDAY, July 2, 2008

Search
 This Site Web - powered by YAHOO! SEARCH

- Home News Sports Features Entertainment Business Opinion Close-Up Obituaries Classifieds More Sites Help Desk

More News:

- Ex-con suspected in eight slayings - including former Utah mother and child -- nabbed in Illinois
- Pipe bomb explodes in man's hand - and he's arrested
- Utah couple dies in Montana crash
- W. Valley man foils burglars - in his underwear, with a shotgun
- Utah forecast: A bit cooler, but a hot 4th on tap
- On second try, UDOT moves I-80 bridge into position
- Utahn can ignore state sex-offender registry
- Man says guilty to sex abuse of relative
- Police identify man shot dead after robbing West Valley store, taking clerk hostage
- Son, 19, accused of hatchet attack on dad, booked into jail
- Summer means 'trauma season,' and need for blood donations
- Utah Supreme Court tosses out conviction of 'wedgie' killer
- Huntsman calls for climate change plan to rival Kennedy moon challenge
- Officials make rounds at zoo
- Senators join effort to block EnergySolutions' nuke waste imports plan
- 1.5 million U. medical records recovered; but were they compromised?
- Study: Realistic body images shown on kids' TV
- LDS Hospital's maternity rooms to get more light, focus on family
- Proposed parking revisions a hot topic
- Tooele attic skull probably was Native American's
- Ogden School District gets $700K

Tribtowns.com: Enter your Zip code to find news and events in your area [input] GO

- del.icio.us Digg Reddit YahooMyWeb Google Facebook What's this?
- Print Email

Friends of Alta Group works to preserve Albion Basin's natural beauty

By Tom Wharton
 The Salt Lake Tribune

Article Last Updated: 06/18/2008 05:27:49 PM MDT

When the snow at the top of Little Cottonwood Canyon finally melts this summer and thousands of Wasatch Front residents invade Albion Basin to camp, hike, watch birds and photograph wildflowers, few people will know why the area is largely undeveloped and no fee is charged to enjoy it.

Click photo to enlarge

The Albion Basin at the top of Little Cottonwood Canyon is... (Al Hartmann/The Salt Lake Tribune)

Services such as shuttles, parking help, educational programs, research and land purchases are largely provided by a nonprofit group called Friends of Alta.

"As a resident who has lived up there since 1956, I feel pleased that we have been able to keep Albion Basin pretty much as it was when we came there," said Bill Levitt, owner of the Alta Lodge, a retired nine-term mayor of Alta, and one of the founders of Friends of Alta.

The approximately 900-member group with an annual budget of $165,500 got its start in 1981 as Levitt and the town of Alta needed financial help to mount what turned into a successful legal challenge to stop a 400-unit timeshare from being built between Alta and Snowbird.

The developers promised to bankrupt the tiny town of Alta in the legal fight and actually won the first round in court. But some Alta Lodge guests suggested to Levitt's wife, Mimi - now the group's president - that people organize to raise money for a defense fund. Alta ultimately prevailed after a long court fight.

The group, which then called itself the Alta Defense Fund, formally incorporated in 1981. But the name was changed to Friends of Alta in 1985, in keeping with a broader mission that included acquiring private property in Albion Basin to preserve as open space.

The Levitts sold 8 acres they owned of the 600-acre basin to the U.S. Forest Service and, with the help of Salt Lake City, which holds the water rights, began to prohibit development by not selling water and by buying lots and conservation easements. According to Jen Clancy, the group's executive director, Friends of Alta has purchased 20 lots near the top of Little Cottonwood Canyon.

"Friends of Alta understands the value of open space, wildlife habitat and recreation in the basin," she said, adding that water from Little Cottonwood Canyon supplies about 20 percent of the needs of 400,000 Salt Lake County

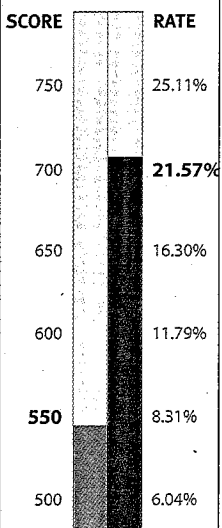

Utah CEO
 forward thinking

A match made in Heaven

The Salt Lake Tribune

IMPROVE YOUR CREDIT

GET OUT OF DEBT
 Get a FREE plan

Advertisement

ONE SPOONFUL IS ALL IT TAKES!

GET DETAILS

VALUE UP TO $5,000

grant

- Sandy Council delays height-limit vote
- Seniors are the safest drivers in SLC
- Paul Rolly: Days of '47 Rodeo rides on
- Provo Council to consider vicious-dog measure
- New members picked for Office of Ethnic Affairs
- Utah senators slam congressional oil-shale development moratorium
- iProvo sale has loose ends, but deal still on
- SLC in June evades triple digit temps
- Willow Creek talks annexation
- Arts center project may get $1 million
- No jail for ex-crime counselor
- FLDS 'lost boy' found guilty in rape-murder of 15-year-old girlfriend residents.

The group has branched into other areas, the most obvious being the summer booth it operates in conjunction with the town of Alta. Because of that effort, the U.S. Forest Service does not charge a fee to use the basin. Approximately 40,000 summer visitors to Albion Basin are greeted at the booth from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. seven days a week when the road is open. Workers provide brochures and information on wildflowers, tell visitors where parking is available, offer tips on where to hike, and stress the importance of protecting the watershed. A free shuttle program offered last year will continue.

Clancy also instigated some education and research programs. The group partnered with Alta, Westminster College and Utah State University on an eco-geographical study that has become a resource for education, research projects and planning. Scientists from the University of Wisconsin-Parkside have begun a wetlands and groundwater evaluation study.

The group works with teachers and students to teach natural history, social studies and biology to area teachers. It also teams with the Cottonwood Canyons Foundation, Alta Ski Lifts and the forest service to remove invasive weeds.

Bill Levitt said that, when he ran for mayor in 1970, he hoped Alta would remain as beautiful for his children and grandchildren as it was then.

"I talked to my grandkids and kids and they say we got it right," he said.

* TOM WHARTON can be contacted at wharton@sltrib.com. His phone number is ☎ 801-257-8909 . Send comments about this story to livingeditor@sltrib.com.

 Return to Top

Master of Science in Nursing
Master of Information Systems

ASSOCIATE'S DEGREES

Associate of Arts In Business
Associate of Arts In Health Care Administration
Associate of Arts In Criminal Justice

LEARN MORE ►